Enosburg was the scene of a violent affray last Sunday evening, which may result fatally. Between seven and eight o'clock a man named Jack O'Brieight o'clock a man named Jack O'Brien, a boss of a section on the Missisquoi railroad, was stabbed with a dirk knife twice, once in the side and once in the neck, and left for dead near the track. After a time he partially regained consciousness and crawled to his house distant about one-eighth of a mile. He was not able to give any account of how he received his injuries, but repeated the name of Pat Regan several times. Regan, who was also employed on the railroad, was afterwards arrested. Both were Irishmen, and both had been drinking during the day. O'Brien's wounds are very severe. On examination Regan was discharged, it appearing that the act was done in self defense.

The evidence that Henry Gravelin is the murderer of Herbert O. White at Weathersfield is growing stronger each day. Carpenter was discharged because the blood spots and hair in his house proved to be those of gray squirrels, and the other stains were caused by decayed apples. The report that he had turned state's evidence was ungrounded. In Gravelin's case, however, other evidence is that White's wagon and harness have been found concealed onear where he had pastured the horse.
